

Boston Police Captain Tells of Arrest of Hickey in 1905.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 2.—J. Frank Hickey, the boy strangler, was arraigned today before Judge Charles H. Brown of the Supreme Court, to plead to an indictment charging him with strangling Joseph Josephs, a Lackawanna boy, a year ago.

Not only confessed to the crime, but will enter a formal plea of not guilty and will be remanded to jail for an early trial.

TO QUESTION HIM IN OTHER CASES.

The police department has received many demands relating to the death of the man who was killed in various accidents and requesting that Hickey be questioned in connection with them.

A dispatch from Superintendent McGuire of the Department of Safety at Pittsburgh, told of an incident on Lawrence street, a Centennial hotel and of a dispatch in December, 1909. The present president for a marked degree the manner in which

A New York, Edwin A. Tipton, president of the Tipton Tanning Company, is said to have been in the city last week. He is thought to have been the British family agent to arrange a certain marriage. The sale is presently stalled.

Associated with Tipton in this deal is William H. Wilson, a millionaire, who is prominent on the New York stock exchange.

The caption printed in the baseball column of the Post last week, "The man who is believed to have been the British family agent to arrange a certain marriage," and the headline "Harris' Hospital of Indianapolis, would operate as a hospital for a few weeks before leaving," British royal family agent, is said to be E. McElwheen secretary and treasurer of the Tipton Tanning Company.

When Harris' deal baseball news was first reported, it was said that the deal was a death of the Jew and Kruck boy. Young Frank was given white, strangled and buried in the same vacant house. He was covered.

Edward P. Adams, a nine-year-old boy, was killed in 1910, after playing baseball with a ball which was later taken away from him and sent to investigate.

In the confession, Harry tells of three other cases in which he had been involved. The first was the case of the boy, Morley of Lowell, Mass. In 1910, the strangulation of Michael Kruck, the Jew boy, was the second case, and the Jew boy in 1911.

He himself repeatedly said that these were the only three cases in which he had been involved, and that he was a victim, although he admits that he has

MELLEN CALLED G. T. "HOSTILE"

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—When the Federal government, now investigating the New Haven railroad's monopoly, begins its action in court it is probable testimony given a year ago by President Charles Mellen will be used against him.

That testimony shows he admitted disposing of the Ontario & Western to the New York Central for $2,000,000 less than had been offered by another railroad company.

Today's story stated he did this because he was determined to head off a race into this transportation field by the Grand Trust.

This all came out in a hearing before the Federal Public Service Commission at Albany last January. A committee of minority stockholders of the Rutland railroad had employed Samuel Duntrepper to represent them at a hearing before the Federal Public Service Commission. The object was to prevent against that road being turned over bodily by the New York Central to the Mellen monopoly.

It was brought out by President Mellen himself that a general rearrangement of the railroad maps of New York and New England was before him at the time of the New York Central and the New Haven, whose sole object was to both up this whole territory against the Grand Trust.

The New York Central and the New Haven swapped ownership and control of New roads as freely as school boys swap knives. The New York Central surrendered its control of the Mellen-Morgan road a half-interest in the Rutland to the New York Central.

In answer to a question as to the extent of the New Haven interest in the Ontario, Mr. Mellen said:

"I have a majority of the stock. I had always been in favor of disposing of it to the New York Central. It is of the importance to them of the rights of the Ontario & Western had been secured and the Ontario & Western would be a serious matter for them, it would seem to me, if we should dispose of that property to a hostile interest."

Q.—The what did you refer by a "hostile interest?" A.—The Grand Trust.

Q.—You mean a competing interest? A.—Yes.

Q.—But why couldn't the Pittsburgh road (a subsidiary of the Boston & Maine) take that interest? A.—The Pittsburgh road had no arrangements for reaching that territory.

Q.—But the Pittsburgh road is a complete

CALL 50 FOR EMILIUS TRIAL

BOSTON, Dec. 2.—More than fifty witnesses are here from New Sweden for the opening of the trial of the Rev. Charles Emilus, a former pastor of the Lutheran church, Mrs. Mary Jacobson, his mother-in-law, and Edward J. Jacobson, in the Supreme court of Ansonia, Conn., charged with the murder of August Jacobson, a prosperous New Sweden farmer, last year.

The trial is expected to last at least a week, and has aroused unusual interest throughout the country. Today's session was the work of selecting a jury will not be begun until Thursday. The next date will depend on the condition of the court calendar and the decision of Attorney-General Patterson, who came here almost at once after announcing the trial of Mrs. Emilus Jacobson.

The defendants are ready and confident of their acquittal.

Jacobson was employed on the morning of June 11, 1911. He was buried the following day, and according to the report sent to the medical examiner, Jacobson took his own life. The state contends the motive for the crime was the desire on the part of the defendants to get assurance money.

A letter alleged to have been written by Jacobson will be one of the most important links in the government's case. This letter, according to the Attorney-General, is a forgery. William E. Hingston, a well-known writer from Boston, will be a state witness. He already has said the letter is a forgery.

The state also contends Mrs. Jacobson, one of the defendants, made application the day after the crime for her husband's insurance. Three months later rumors about the countryside led the authorities to examine the body. Mrs. Jacobson was found in Jacobson's bed and two others in his house. One had placed her feet on the bed. The Grand Jury which indicted the three persons, who are in jail.

Emilus is a college graduate, and formerly was pastor of the Lutheran church in Stockholm, Minn. Friends of the young preacher have stood by him loyally and are firm in the belief he is innocent.

All of the defendants are being held without bail, but show no ill effects from their stay in jail.

Carl Holstrom will be one of the most important witnesses for the state. The prosecution contends that Emilus on the night previous to the crime was at the Jacobson home but returned to his home and later in the early morning hours returned to the Jacobson home. Holstrom said that he saw the preacher shortly after midnight previous to the crime and that the minister was walking in the direction of the Jacobson home. Holstrom's story is asked by the state.

Through Mrs. Karpovitch, she told of the proposals her mail has brought.

"No, no," declared Mrs. Karpovitch emphatically, "she should consider not one of these proposals. These—portraits from whom are they? No, I shall teach Mathie to speak the English and then she shall find a position. I shall teach her soon, too, she is so bright already."

Will Miss Mathie pose for any of the artists?

"Most certainly she shall not consider it now," was the reply. "No, no, the proposals of the theatre. She is too young for that."

"Blame the Wife For Husband's Ruin," Advises Dr. Conrad

According to Dr. A. Z. Conrad, pastor of the Park Street Church, you must BLAME THE WIFE:

—If a family lives beyond its means.
—If a husband runs into debt.
—If a man takes to speculation.
—If he gambles to get out of debt.
—If he goes to jail for theft.

Dr. Conrad, speaking in a full congregation at his church, said:

Many young men in Boston are living far beyond their means, plunging into speculation, and then, when the money runs out, they are left with nothing but a pile of debts.

FREMSTADT PATS DRIVER'S HEAD

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—Miss Olive Fremstadt, the prima donna, was saved from injury last evening through having charged her seat in her touring car this morning before it was in collision with a taxicab.

Miss Fremstadt, with her secretary, Miss Watkins, and the latter's mother, had spent the day morning on Long Island. They were returning to New York after dark when the accident occurred.

All through the day, that she might enjoy the scenery, Miss Fremstadt had occupied the seat to the left of the chauffeur, John McNeill. When they reached the city, coming over the Queensboro bridge, she changed her seat, getting into the body of the car.

Ten minutes later the automobile, coming out of Central Park at Fifty-first street, was halted by a southbound trolley on the crosswalk.

BIGGEST SHIP MAY COME HERE

Chairman Hugh Bancroft of the Port Directors today admitted that there is a possibility of the Imperator, the Hawaiian-American line's largest and newest steamer, coming to Boston. He asserted that the steamer is a great world port is suited.

Chairman Bancroft was commenting on the visit of Captain Ruser of the Hawaiian-American line to Boston. In company with Chairman Bancroft he went down the harbor and made a careful study of the new thirty-five-foot channel.

Captain Ruser has had command of the Kaiser's Augusta Victoria, one of the vessels which is to be sent to Boston in the near future. He has just been released from the Kaiser's line and is to command the Imperator.

While the Hawaiian-American line fully believes that the necessary accommodations will be ready in New York by next spring, they have been informing themselves carefully as to the facilities in Boston. In September, they asked for full particulars as to the depth of the ship channel, depths of water at the Commodore Pier and the depths of the harbor.

While the directors of the Hawaiian-American line in Boston last month they asked many questions, including that of the possibility of the Imperator's coming to Boston. They are now considering the possibility of the Imperator's coming to Boston.

It is now saying that it would be very glad to see the Imperator come here, even for a single trip. It is now saying that it would be very glad to see the Imperator come here.

"MUSICIANS" FILLS HOUSES

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

This week to be entitled "The Musician" is the first of a series of musical sketches of the great musical clash up on Huntington Avenue.

From Krueger, the violinist, was introduced at Symphony Hall, supported by an orchestra of symphony players under Otto Beck.

Adapted and his musical troops played the new music at the Boston House, well supplied with musicians in the shape of Russian music.

It is exactly the rival concert of the "Musician" and the war correspondence, after looking in at both shows, gave the honors to Krueger by a narrow margin.

The Krueger concert was an absolute hit. The Opera House concert was given before a very large audience, which did not quite fill the house.

The Opera House crowd, however, was not with delight at the situation. "We did not expect to sell out today," said the manager, "but when Mary Krueger sang and the week after when she came."

What has actually happened is that the competition between the two great institutions has attracted the attention of the public, and the suburbs are rushing up to Huntington Avenue on Sunday afternoons. Both institutions are in front instead of loss by the situation.

Opera Chooses Russians.
The Opera House concert was extremely interesting. Mr. Caplet had composed a program called from the works of modern Russian composers, including Rimsky-Korsakoff, Scriabin, and others.

Caplet Wins Credit.
The orchestra under Mr. Caplet ought to be congratulated upon its successful performance of these strange and difficult pieces. In the Russian symphonic poem was not the case of the symphony orchestra, but it was not to be expected.

Lillian Russell to Lecture to Women To Wear Million in Jewels (Borrowed)

Famous Actress Appears in Role of Missionary to American Women.

LILLIAN RUSSELL (MRS. A. P. MOORE).

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—Equipped with gowns of all sorts of conditions, and with a million dollars' worth of jewels (some of them borrowed), Lillian Russell, the "Fair Lillian" of years of stage history, is preparing to go on the lecture platform.

The lecture will be to women talking them into to do the things Lillian Russell Moore does to perfection. They will hear how to design, make, choose or buy their own clothes, and how to wear the garments once they are acquired. They will hear how to wear and how not to wear jewels. They will hear how to keep healthy, lively and young, and will hear how to be intellectual. Lillian's recipe for this last is half an hour's thinking each day.

Mrs. Russell is still Miss Lillian to America, spite of her marriage to Alexander P. Moore of Pittsburgh. She has become a home-woman since her marriage, however, and lives in New York.

"Every Woman Should Wear."
"Yes, I love being a home woman," said Miss Russell, smiling happily as she talked of her new life, seated in the beautiful Chinese drawing room of her new home in West High-Ninth street.

Every woman should wear it, she said. "Every woman should be companionable. Home life is the only real life for a woman. Of course, she can have outside interests, but nothing takes the place of a home in the life of a woman."

"Women are Overdressed."

"FAMILY TREE" IN WLE WILL SUIT

A "family tree" of the Lyle family will be a prominent exhibit in connection with the suit of Mrs. Frances Lyle Sparrow of Abington and Miss Janet M. Lyle of Worcester to share in the millions left by John S. Lyle of Tenand, N. J. Their suit is based on the contention that they are niece and grandniece, respectively, of the late New York banker dealer.

Mrs. Sparrow lives on Washington street, Abington, while Miss Lyle's home is at No. 34 Belmont street, Worcester. The Lyle estate is estimated to be worth more than $1,000,000.

In speaking of the case, Mrs. Sarah M. Lyle, mother of Janet Lyle, said: "My daughter, Janet, was born March 25, 1877. She is of a retiring nature and will not talk about herself on this case. I can understand why John S. Lyle said, before he died, that he had no relatives. I have often heard Mrs. Frances Lyle Sparrow tell how, when she was a child, her father, a wealthy man, had a brother, John S. Lyle, the dead millionaire, and that her mother had been given positive instructions that his name was never to be mentioned in the house. The two sisters had become estranged. Each girl, without ever speaking to the other."

There are but three relatives from what I have learned, who will get the money. We are three sisters, and the retain it, but I am sure it is more than $1,000,000 than it is $10,000.

Mrs. Frances Lyle Sparrow and her sister, Mrs. Nellie Orem, of Abington, she said. "My mother, Mrs. Lyle, was the daughter of John S. Lyle, her mother's father, Miss Lyle, said. "My mother, Mrs. Lyle, was the daughter of John S. Lyle, her mother's father, Miss Lyle, said."

WOMEN RUSH TO VOTE TOMORROW

Fourteen Massachusetts cities will have elections tomorrow and the women play a larger part than ever before. The cities are Fall River, Fitchburg, Gloucester, Haverhill, Holyoke, Marlboro, Needham, Northampton, Pittsfield, Springfield, Taunton, Ware, Weymouth and Woburn. Of these the three largest are Fall River, Weymouth and Woburn. The Fall River caucus now. Fifteen more elections, November 15, 20 December 17, Boston January and Cambridge in March.

More women probably will go to the polls than ever before, notwithstanding that law permits them to vote only for school board members. In the cities where their names placed upon the voting list and the registration is nearly double the number of men, the school contests will be more interesting. The school Board heretofore has been a male preserve and the women's activities are mainly responsible.

More than 8,000 women have registered in the cities where the school board is elected as previously. The School Committee will be completely overshadowed.

have candidates for School Committee, nearly 7,000 women are eligible to vote. New Bedford will have an interesting contest in which the women's vote, 2,000, will be a strong factor. Many women voters have expressed their intention of casting their ballots at Holmoke, Everett, Somerville, Melford and other cities.

Lawrence has more than 11,000 registered voters and there is not a woman among them, and Gloucester, with a registration of more than 5,000, has but twenty-three women eligible to vote.

Mr. James J. Storrow, as Head of the Chamber of Commerce,
Has a Great Opportunity for Public Service

The Chamber of Commerce has chosen James J. Storrow to be its president for the coming year.

This greatest business organization in the world has found in Mr. Storrow a man equal to the honor and the responsibility of being its chosen head.

Evidence has been accumulating recently that there is an organized movement to destroy the splendid independence of the Chamber's public work in matters affecting the public service corporations, by electing men who are connected directly or indirectly with these corporations.

This ominous movement has been watched with much anxiety by those who realize what it all means and appreciate what it will mean if the organized power of nearly five thousand business men is rendered useless to protect the public interests by officers whose affiliations are wrong or whose tendencies are reactionary.

The recent power for good of the Chamber of Commerce in this community can scarcely be overestimated. With constant and courageous vigilance, it has thwarted many a scheme to overreach the public, and many a scheme has been left unthought because its authors realized that some watchful committee of the Chamber had its eye on the situation and that nothing which could not bear scrutiny would escape it.

Every member of this great organization may be proud of its activities during the last few years. If any cavalier doubts the Chamber's influence upon the public affairs of the Commonwealth, let him talk with the men in public office whose duties come within the purview of any of the committees of the Chamber.

The AMERICAN asserts without fear of successful contradiction, that the good men in public office respect the activities of the Chamber of Commerce and the bad men fear it.

Its power has arisen out of the strength of its four thousand five hundred business men and out of the public respect and confidence which its work has won.

Mr. James J. Storrow is well-fitted to carry forward the standard of this fine business organization. He has shown public spirit and courage.

It is very unlikely that the forbodings of those who are watching the attempts of certain influences to control the officers of the Chamber and fear that Mr. Storrow's election may be part of this campaign, will ever be justified.

In this community his past services demand that the public should assume that he would not accept this position if there were anything in his business connections which would deprive him of absolute independence.

This year we are about to face the problem of restoring her business independence to New England by destroying the railroad monopoly which menaces it. In this effort the public looks to the Chamber of Commerce for leadership.

Mr. Storrow understands this situation, and those who understand Mr. Storrow, will not hesitate to believe that his acceptance of the leadership of the Chamber is conclusive evidence that he is free to serve the community in which he is honored.

He has a great opportunity for public service.

Justice, Not Bald Political Economy Alone,
Points the Way, Says Cardinal O'Connell,
—and He Is Right

If all men who are leaders, or who profess or pretend to be leaders, of their fellow-citizens, would discuss issues of public concern with the calmness of spirit and the thoroughness of judicial attitude which mark the pastoral letters of Cardinal O'Connell—published entire in yesterday's Sunday AMERICAN—the atmosphere of our social and political life would be much clearer and progress towards the light steeper and more rapid.

No one imagines for a moment, least of all the eminent author of the paper himself, that perfect unanimity should prevail as to the arguments so ably put forth in the Cardinal's pastoral letter.

But, in giving thought to so profound a problem as the relations between employers and the employed, there can be no shadow of disagreement with Cardinal O'Connell when he says:

The proper consideration of the problem depends much on the way in which we approach it. The initial mistake that is made in trying to find a solution is in viewing the question as a merely economic one.

The lives and happiness of millions of human beings are involved in the issue; and this gives it a moral aspect which cannot be ignored. It is much more than an economic problem.

From the moment that the well-being of individuals and families is concerned in any question at issue, it is lifted out of the domain of mere economics. Bald political economy with its inflexible law of supply and demand can no longer cope with it.

The reciprocal rights and duties inhering in the personality and position of those who are making claims and of those who are relating them, enter in and create at once a moral issue.

In the long run dollars and cents are powerless before a just human right and must give way in every community ruled by principles of justice.

The question of human rights that is involved in the issue between capital and labor goes deeper down than any legal enactment concerning them.

It is in such a spirit of fairness to capital and to labor alike, with impartial regard for the rights of both employer and employee, that, as this newspaper has repeatedly urged, a way can be found out of the dark cave of difficulty and dissension into the full sunshine of a solution which shall mean justice for all.

What Comets Are Good For—They Make Man Think and Realize His Intellectual Greatness

In Meditating on the Stars Man Begins to Comprehend His Physical Little-ness and to Reflect That He is but an Atom in the Great System of the Universe in Which Many Worlds May Live

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

A CORRESPONDENT who writes a good hand asks me: "What are comets good for? They seem to be popping all around, and a great deal is made about them, but I haven't got a telescope to look at them and probably I couldn't find them if I had. They are neither good to eat nor to look at, nor can they cure the cold, the liver, or put any in anybody's pocket, so what's the use of bothering with them? I've astronomical sharpers remind me of the old philosopher who stood at the stars until he fell into the ditch."

This may be a considerable number of years ago, but the writer of the letter, "The world is full of people who never look overhead and who think that a diamond on the ground is worth infinitely more than a one in the sky. It is for them the life of the comet."

Two Comets Now Near Sun Won't Get Much Attention

It is true that the two new comets which are now cleaving the depths of space around the sun will probably not make enough display in the lower to attract general notice. Very likely they haven't got as much substance in them as a State Street newspaper. If their heads were composed of gold nuggets or diamond studs they'd be hands upon them, and then they'd be turned into rags and rags and rags.

From the point of view of a comet, it is worth absolutely nothing EXCEPT AS A PROVOKER OF THOUGHT, but for that purpose it is no more valuable than a library full of books.

All true knowledge comes from observation of nature. Every one of our great achievements on the earth is due to that alone. Books teach us nothing but what other men have thought or done. It is not by looking at books, and did not something new, we go on in nature. Naturally enough, we confine our attention principally to the phenomena of nature which are close about us—those which we can touch and handle. But it is not by even seeing anything else than that humanity would be no better than a collection of brute animals. The great distinction between men and sheep is that the latter think only of the grass, while the former think also of the stars. In thinking of the stars man thinks of his life's nature. When he sees that there are a hundred million stars, instead of one, he begins to comprehend at the same time his physical littleness and his intellectual greatness. When he sees a new comet sailing out of the depths of space to visit his sun and reflects that the inhabitants of other worlds and other systems may have gazed upon that comet long before his race began, he feels as the inhabitants of some lone island do when a ship with strange sails comes into sight over the horizon.

One Hundred Ways

When he analyzes the light of the stranger, and finds that it is made of similar substances to that which exist on the earth, he feels that he would not be altogether lost, no matter where he might wander in space. He would be at home on the rim of the universe! And, feeling this, he feels, at the same time, that he is more than an inhabitant of the little earth—he is an inhabitant of a vast Cosmos, and may live, by turns, in many worlds.

Comets are the ships of space. Some of them are limited to the range of their voyages; they skirt the shores of our solar system, and pass among the planets as little coasting vessels travel from port to port, without venturing out upon the vast ocean beyond. Others appear to come from afar, across the boundless deep. They have seen strange sights; they have visited wonderful seas; they may have traversed the marvels of the Milky Way, and looked upon the riches of the great star-clusters and sun-clusters.

Trip of Far-Travelling
Comet is Indeed
Astonishing

What voyage as astonishing as that of a far-travelling comet? Suppose you could embark upon one, and, endowed with endowments of life, visit with it a hundred or a thousand suns, stars of various hues, of various magnitudes, with infinitely diversified systems of planets revolving around them. The sun itself and the comets that visit our system are but a few of the millions of suns and planets that we know of, can only follow them in imagination.

But in the meaning of that gift of imagination which enables him to follow them? Is it not the greatest of our faculties, as far as we have learned what our faculties are? Reason is weak, but the wings of the imagination bear the weak, and sometimes high prices, huge harvests, and times and pastures these do not constitute the true life of man; they concern him for only a few short years which fly by and vanish like morning mists. The comets and the stars teach him what he really is, if only he will ponder upon their message.

ON
The Indifference of Most People Toward Cruelty to Animals

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Kramer

WILLIAM G. SPRAGUE, of the American Humane Association, offered a prize for the best essay on "Humane Education."

It was won by Mrs. Hugo Krause of Louisville, Ky.

Speaking of the indifference of well-born and well-educated people toward lesser creatures Mrs. Krause says:

"Here are some of the forms this indifference assumes. The cruelty of commercial greed and avarice, such as killing the animal parent and leaving the young to die of starvation and exposure. Ten thousand souls die annually of starvation because their mothers are killed in the breeding season." David Starr Jordan in Man and Kotik. Depriving the parent of its young and leaving the parent to be consumed with the agony of grief over its loss. When a mother loses her child her heart gives a cry like the cry of a wild beast: when a wild beast loses its young it gives a cry like that of a human mother. Victor Hugo in 92.

The horrors of the Western plains during the snow season—so forcibly brought to public attention by the action of the American Humane Association, in procuring photographs by a special agent sent out for investigation. Crowding cattle when transporting them in such a way they cannot lie, and keeping them thus twenty-eight hours without rest, food or water.

The cruelty of trap and spring-pole, during the death of the dumb victim comes after hours, sometimes days, of suffering from broken limbs, lacerated flesh and the agony of fever and thirst caused by these, not to mention all the terror and fright endured.

The vanity which leads to all this trapping and hunting, the adorning of the body with the heads, claws, tails and skins of the little furry brothers, the decking forth with the beautiful plumage of the skin of wood and pheasant.

The cruelty of sport when innocent and beautiful creatures like deer, moose, wild song-bird and fish are sacrificed to the human delight in slaughter and bloodshed. But sacrificed to a still greater degree when wounded and left to die slowly of wounds and the cruelty of their kind.

The cruelties practiced in connection with the exhibition of trick animals. Lions beaten over the head with clubs till the blood flows from nose and ears; horses, dogs and cats whipped unmercifully in being taught; elephants urged by the jerk of an iron hook inserted in the ear.

The neglect, indifference, ignorance and cruelty of which domestic animals are the victims. And the crowd of cruelties perpetrated by man, the unmentionable secret crimes of the vivisectionist's laboratory.

These are the practices, not of the savage days of bloody sacrifices, nor of the middle ages of dark and secret crimes, but of the open, progressive, moral nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

For all this, Mrs. Krause thinks, with every intelligent and kind-hearted being, that the remedy lies with the mothers and teachers. She suggests what has been said in this column a hundred times, that Sunday schools should teach children to love and understand animals, and that ministers should preach on this subject from the pulpit, and that classes should be formed to educate mothers how to educate their children.

And added to all this: Humane education should be a part of the curriculum of the regular school course.

First—Because of its value in racial evolution, national progress and individual development, as set forth in the preceding paragraphs.

Second—Because this would be the best means of extending humane education to ALL CLASSES of children irrespective of creed, class, nationality, etc.

Third—Because humane education, when taught pedagogically and correctly, is so closely related and correlated to the curriculum that its omission results in the presentation of the former.

Nature study, civics and ethics are so correlated with humane education that to omit the latter is to mar the presentation of the former.

Fourth—Because educators are generally adverse guards in reform measures, and are, therefore, the most easily approached and convinced by argument for its establishment.

Until humane education is so regularly constituted a part of the public school course in a community, those interested in its promulgation should classify the city or community into districts with the various schools as nuclei.

A place of meeting should be selected in each district. These places might be a room in the public library, Y. M. C. A. building, the schoolhouse, a church, private home, hired hall, etc.

The children of the school or schools which are the centres of the districts should be invited to come to the respective meeting places and the officials of the schools be urged to co-operate in the work of their district.

Each group of children should be under the guide of a volunteer worker in this great cause. And all this group should be under the leadership of one general leader in order to promote harmony and a systematized unification of the work.

After organizing on the same general parliamentary plan throughout the several districts, the work should be carried out by following a prepared outline, also uniform in the main features throughout the districts.

Meanwhile, here is an excellent thing for every mother to do who wants her child to grow into useful, constructive and noble maturity, and to escape destructive, ignoble and unworthy propensities.

Let her write to the Audubon Society, 1514 Broadway, New York, and ask for literature about birds suitable to interest a child. She may get a stamped and addressed envelope, and then she must be willing to read this literature and to give a little time daily talking with her children about it.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—The Committee on Public Health of the Suffolk District Medical Society, wishes herewith to thank you for the very efficient aid rendered by your editorial article in the matter of the doctors' motor and the twenty-minute rule. We feel as you do, that that which we ask will be in no way against public policy, but will rather increase our possible usefulness in public service.

Very truly yours,
